

Your Photo on a mug, jug, plate or teapot - or on all of them

The better your photo the better our painting. You may already have photos you want us to use but could you just check against this list. It's ranked in order of importance

- The eyes – the paintings that get the best feedback and seem to have the most impact are the ones where the pet or animal is looking at you or in your direction, the eyes are sharp and in focus and there is catchlight in the eyes.
- Detail – painting just a head will give more detail and possibly capture more of the essence of your pet. Whether it is just the head or the whole body we replicate what we see, therefore this is what you will get on your product

This was easy to work from – in focus, particularly the eyes and excellent catch light

This was the result

To achieve photos like this you might need some help. Get down at their level, if necessary, have someone hold them. This spaniel sat and was looking at something behind me but looking directly at me would have been fine. If there is a person behind we can work around. The same applies to the bum shot – which actually we find more difficult. Again get someone else involved, if it's a dog have them walk away from you but be down at their level so you just get the bum, tail – if there is one and maybe ears

You can see here how low I got

This is the result. I added the ears
